

Why Dante's by Enis Baçova has become the North Shore's go-to Italian table

On the Shore, there is no shortage of places selling pizza. But every now and then, a restaurant becomes something else entirely.

Not just a place people eat – a place people return to. Again. And again. That is what has happened with Dante's by Enis Baçova. From the moment you walk through the doors, there is a feeling that this is a place that isn't trying to imitate Italy through decoration or clichés. It feels alive, warm and loud in the right way; glasses clinking, pizza arriving at the centre of the table, hands reaching across plates, conversations stretching longer than planned. This is Italian dining the way it was always meant to be: shared, generous, emotional and deeply human.

More than pizza

Of course, the pizza is what first made people talk. Light, airy dough with beautifully inflated crusts, slow fermentation, high hydration, and carefully selected ingredients – the kind of pizza that somehow feels indulgent and effortless at the same time. But what truly separates Dante's is that it never stops at pizza. Fresh pasta dishes, Italian fried specialities, seasonal desserts, imported ingredients, aperitivo culture, good wine, cold beer... Simple pleasures done properly. Every dish feels connected to a philosophy: fresh ingredients, careful technique, and respect for the guest. At Dante's, quality is not treated like a luxury upgrade. It is treated as the starting point.

The difference people feel

Many restaurants focus only on flavour. Dante's focuses on how people feel after they leave. That distinction matters. The dough is crafted through long fermentation and careful development, creating pizzas that are lighter, more digestible, and less heavy than conventional fast-made pizza. It is one of the reasons customers often leave surprised by how satisfying the experience feels without the usual discomfort associated with rushed pizza production. There is precision behind the scenes, but the guest experiences only the pleasure. No lecture, no performance, just food that tastes alive.

A place built around the table

One of the strongest ideas behind Dante's is simple: food is better when shared. You see it everywhere inside the restaurant: tables ordering multiple pizzas for everyone, pastas landing in the middle, friends stealing slices from each other, families lingering long after the meal is technically finished. The atmosphere feels closer to Naples than to modern transactional dining culture. Dante's understands something many places forget: people do not remember menus as much as they remember moments, and the restaurant has become one of the Shore's favourite places to create them.

Good taste without pretension

What makes Dante's unique is that it manages to be premium without being intimidating. The ingredients are serious. The standards are serious. The execution is serious. But the experience never feels stiff. You can come dressed up for date night, arrive casually with family after the beach, stop in for a quick pizza and beer, or settle into a long dinner with friends. The restaurant adapts naturally to all of it, and that balance is rare.

A local success story with international recognition

Behind the restaurant is Enis Baçova, one of New Zealand's most recognised pizzaioli, known internationally for his work in Pizza Contemporanea and modern fermentation techniques. Under his leadership, Dante's has earned global recognition while still remaining deeply connected to Auckland and its local community. That combination gives the restaurant a unique energy: international standards with neighbourhood soul.

Good quality. Good taste. Good value. Good times.

In the end, the appeal of Dante's is not complicated at all. People want food that tastes real, consistency, warmth, atmosphere, and somewhere that feels worth returning to. And increasingly across the North Shore, that place has become Dante's. Not because it tries too hard to impress, but because it understands the timeless Italian truth that great hospitality is never only about food. It is about the table.

Northcote Tavern

The Northcote Tavern has been part of Auckland's North Shore since the 1800s. As you will discover in our history section, there has been a pub on the Northcote Point site since the 1850s. 160 years on 'The Tav' is still a place for people to have a drink and hang out with friends and enjoy themselves – as it has always been. But it is now so much more – sport, food, family and community are the key ingredients.
